

MORAL CONSENSUS & DISSENT

It would be good if all humans were to agree on a basic morality: if all of us were to share the same moral maxims. But moral consensus would be just as bad as political unanimity, for it would indicate either oppression or utter conformism. Moral dissent is always necessary for moral progress. But only constructive moral dissent is valuable: moral nihilism (or amoralism) à la Nietzsche is bad.

6'

FT 054