

NOBODY SHOULD BE FREED FROM ALL RULES

The monarchs and high priests of yesterday regarded themselves, and were regarded by their subjects, as being above ordinary morality: as being freed from all rules. That division worked before the introduction of democracy, when the great majority of the people had ~~no rights~~ only few rights, and when the powerful could use force indiscriminately. Nowadays, in all democracies, the rulers are in the public eye, so they must watch their step. On the other hand ^{& bureaucrats} businessmen continue to be free from public scrutiny.
