

A SOCIETY OF MILLIONAIRES

A millionaire is, at least in the popular imagination, a person who has practically unlimited access to all the resources of society — i.e. one who can pay for whatever he needs or wants. In the societies we know about, millionaires are the exception; e.g., in the USA about one in 200 persons is a millionaire. In a just society everybody would be a millionaire because everybody would have access, within reason, to all the resources of society. He would not own them but would be able to enjoy them for as long as he did not thereby restrict the rights of others.
