

DOING GOOD & MORALIZING

Naturally benevolent people do good without moralizing, whereas pharisees moralize without doing good. The so-called libertarians, such as Hayek, Friedman, and Nozick, neither do good nor moralize. (I prefer, they disapprove of do-gooders for interfering with the sacred market and the property rights, and their moral is the Nietzschean or neo-Darwinist one.) Finally, it is possible to do good and moralize at the same time; in particular, to teach morality by example. This is not fashionable but is exactly what we need to build the good society.

201 82 A1
FT 202